For those due to travel

If you are booked on a FlyBmi Airlines flight, please do not go to your UK airport, as your flight will not be operating.

1. In the first instance customers should contact the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) to understand what they can claim back and what they are entitled to.
2. In the event of no cover from the CAA then customers should contact their credit or debit card provider to see what cover they have under the regulation applicable to card purchases for their lost flights.

Scheduled Airline Failure (SAFI) or End Supplier Failure

(ESF) if included as part of the policy – this section is not underwritten by AXA Insurance, please refer to the wording and to relevant claim handler. There is cover under the Scheduled Airline Failure Protection for

- » additional costs incurred replacing the part of the flight arrangements to a similar standard of transportation or
- » If curtailment of the holiday is unavoidable -the cost of return flights to the United Kingdom

as a result of the FlyBmi collapse providing they do not form part of an inclusive holiday prior to departure. For any consequential losses which customers are unable to recover from their card issuer or The CAA, customers should be referred to the relevant claim handler to see if a claim can be considered under the Scheduled Airline Failure section of the policy.

Travel Disruption Cover (TDC) if included as part of the policy

– Please be aware that TDC excludes claims as a result of insolvency of a transport provider, please refer customer to their SAFI or ESF cover if they have it as part of their policy.
